THE AMERICAN-SCOTTISH FOUNDATION®

Andrew Carnegie's Contributions to Architecture and the Promotion of Ideas 1855 – 1919, examines his vision and legacy in the shaping of New York in this, the centennial year of his passing. It is the seventh talk in an ongoing series of talks the American Scottish Foundation has undertaken, under the umbrella project of "The Scots Who Built New York"

In 2014, the American-Scottish Foundation was invited join the Landmarks 50 project to develop a project around on the role and impact of Scots to the building of New York.

The project was envisioned a series of talks but as ASF delved more deeply into the subject and the research became more extensive, ASF realized how little was known of the extent of the impact Scots had had in the developing of the leading landmarks of New York - and non more so than Andrew Carnegie, for without his vision and philanthropic support many of New York's most iconic institutions would not exist.

The project was titled The Scots Who Built New York and ASF determined that it was important to not only tell the story in a series of talks but to to look to develop this as a legacy project, preserving and expanding on the history of the landmark buildings Scots and Scottish-Americans are responsible for in the creating of New York City, cross referencing to the the great Scots who also helped to develop the City and the United States.

A series of seven talks have been given to date, and an Aapp and Walking Tour Map are now being developed which will note over 90 sites linked to Scots and Scottish Americans.
